Should students have a long summer holiday or should terms be longer?

Let's turn that question around. Of course most of all pupils, children and students will say: "Yes, we definitely want to relax so we need long summer holidays". But is it good for studying process? If students will have very long holidays, they will start to forget lots of information of their school subjects. And this is unlucky for student's skills and knowledges.

In my opinion, when you have holidays you shouldn't relax at all... If you have some free time, why won't you read a book or remember some information from studying courses? You can also just check your notes, which were made at school. I think that it is quite normal way to remember some facts and details from your lessons.

Pupils have lots activities on their holidays. Make them useful for study! For example, If you like watching movies or TV-shows try to watch it on foreign language. It will help you to improve your language skills. You watch your favourite show and improve your language. It is so cool, isn't it?

To sum up, as for me, ~~in my opinion~~, our modern school system is good for students. They have enough time to get marks, take exams and they also have enough time to relax and spend holidays with their friends or family. This is what I think about holidays and school terms.
